

India to take 75 years to reach quarter of US GDP: World Bank

SHIKHA CHATURVEDI
New Delhi, 1 August

India will take 75 years to reach a quarter of the United States' GDP at the current rate, according to a new World Bank report that provides a comprehensive roadmap to enable developing countries to escape the "middle-income trap".

The report titled "World Development Report 2024" highlights a challenge to Prime Minister Narendra Modi's aspiration to transform the country into a developed economy by 2047, or achieve high-income status within a generation. It also reveals that over 100 countries, including India, China, Brazil, and South Africa, face significant challenges in attaining high-income status in the coming decades.

In an approach paper summarising its vision for "Viksit Bharat", NITI Aayog last week said India needed to grow at a sustained pace of 7-10 per cent for 20-30 years to escape the middle-income trap and become a developed nation with a per capita income of $18,000 per annum and

TACKLING THE TRAP

- Economic growth in middle-income countries, including India, is decelerating and insufficient to catch up with high-income nations
- Firms in middle-income countries show limited growth compared to those in high-income countries
- World Bank recommends a "3i strategy" — investment, infusion, and innovation — to escape the "middle income trap"

the size of a $30 trillion economy by 2047. "The GDP would have to grow 9 times from today's $3.36 trillion and the per capita income would need to rise 8 times from today's $2,392 per annum," the government's think tank said after its 9th Governing Council meeting attended by chief ministers and lieutenant governors.

According to the World Bank, economic growth in middle-income countries, including India, is not accelerating. In fact, it is slowing down as incomes increase, with the trend becoming more pronounced each decade, the report said.

"The observed rates of economic growth in middle-income countries do not exceed those in high-income countries by the margins needed to catch up in one generation — or even two or three," it said.

Indermit Gill, Chief Economist at the World Bank, noted that many middle-income countries continue to rely on outdated strategies from the last century, focusing primarily on policies designed to expand investment. "If they stick with the old playbook, most developing countries will lose the race to create reasonably prosperous societies by the middle of this century," he said.

The report used estimates from the World Bank's Long Term Growth Model to suggest that if key drivers of economic growth such as investments in human capital, total factor productivity, labour force participation, and the allocation of economic output to public and private investment continue along with recent and historic trends, most middle-income countries are likely to face significant slowdowns between 2024 and 2100.

The report further revealed a "flat and stay" dynamic in firms in India, Mexico, and Peru, where a company that operates for 40 years typically doubles in size. In contrast, a firm that survives that long in the US will grow seven-fold, highlighting weaker forces of creation in middle-income countries. Additionally, in line with this dynamic, firms in India, Mexico, and Peru often remain microenterprises; nearly nine-tenths have fewer than five employees, and only a small fraction employ 10 or more.

"The longevity of undersize firms — many of them informal — points to market distortions that keep enterprises small while keeping too many in business," the report said.

The report introduces a "3i strategy" for achieving high-income status, outlining the need for two distinct transitions during the middle-income phase. Initially, countries must move from a "1i strategy", focused solely on accelerating investment, to a "2i strategy" that combines investment with infusion bringing in and disseminating technologies from abroad. Once this transition is accomplished, the report finally suggests countries adopt a "3i strategy", which emphasises innovation.

Fintech & banking apps: Modern-day data miners in your pocket

ASHLI VARGHESE
New Delhi, 1 August

More than 70 per cent of the financial technology (fintech) and banking applications (apps) analysed in a Reserve Bank of India report have access to crucial user information such as media and storage on communication devices and can track their location.

Calling them "Most sensitive permissions", the Report on Currency and Finance highlighted that fintech apps often collect personal data, potentially invading users' privacy.

The recent report for 2023-24, released on Monday, analysed 339 fintech and banking apps listed on the Google Play Store.

To mitigate this issue, the Store evaluates the data and privacy policies of banks and fintech companies before granting app permissions, the

Note: The categorisation may not be mutually exclusive and certain permissions may be necessary for app functionality for other functions being provided by the app. The analysis covers 181 fintech apps and 158 banking apps

Note: The analysis covers 40 apps in case of the US and the EU and 181 apps in the case of India report said.

Nearly 73 per cent of these apps tracked user location, while over

three-fourths sought data permissions for users' photos, media, files, and storage and requested access to

Wi-Fi connection information. Mobile wallets were noted to request the most sensitive permis-sions. Fintech apps involved in digital lending may also offer payment services, which might lead them to use permissions that are typically not recommended for digital lending apps, the report pointed out.

Indian fintech apps are more likely to request permissions for access to phones, cameras, device IDs, call information, location tracking, and SMS data compared to their counterparts in the US and the European Union (EU).

The comparative analysis covered 40 apps each for the US and the EU and 181 apps in India, assessing the data safety practices of fintech apps in these regions.

Although Indian apps are better placed in sharing data with third parties, they lag behind the US and the EU in matters like data encryption and the choices provided to users to request the deletion of data.

India to take 75 years to reach quarter of US GDP: World Bank

SHIKHA CHATURVEDI
New Delhi, 1 August

India will take 75 years to reach a quarter of the United States' GDP at the current rate, according to a new World Bank report that provides a comprehensive roadmap to enable developing countries to escape the "middle-income trap".

The report titled "World Development Report 2024" highlights a challenge to Prime Minister Narendra Modi's aspiration to transform the country into a developed economy by 2047, or achieve high-income status within a generation. It also reveals that over 100 countries, including India, China, Brazil, and South Africa, face significant challenges in attaining high-income status in the coming decades.

In an approach paper submitted to his vision for "Viksit Bharat", NITI Aayog last week said India needed to grow at a sustained pace of 7-10 per cent for 20-30 years to escape the middle-income trap and become a developed nation with a per capita income of $18,000 per annum and

- Economic growth in middle-income countries, including India, is decelerating and insufficient to catch up with high-income nations
- Firms in middle-income countries show limited growth compared to those in high-income countries
- World Bank recommends a "3i strategy" — investment, infusion, and innovation — to escape the "middle income trap"

the size of a $30 trillion economy by 2047. "The GDP would have to grow 9 times from today's $3.36 trillion and the per capita income would need to rise 8 times from today's $2,392 per annum," the government's think tank said after its 9th Governing Council meeting attended by chief ministers and lieutenant governors.

According to the World Bank, economic growth in middle-income countries, including India, is not accelerating. In fact, it is slowing down as incomes increase, with the trend becoming more pronounced each decade, the report said.

"The observed rates of economic growth in middle-income countries do not exceed those in high-income countries by the margins needed to catch up in one generation — or even two or three," it said.

Indermit Gill, Chief Economist at the World Bank, noted that many middle-income countries continue to rely on outdated strategies from the last century, focusing primarily on policies designed to expand investment. "If they stick with the old playbook, most developing countries will lose the race to create reasonably prosperous societies by the middle of this century," he said.

The report also estimates from the World Bank's Long Term Growth Model to suggest that if key drivers of economic growth such as investments in human capital, total factor productivity, labour force participation, and the allocation of economic output to public and private investment continue along with recent and historic trends, most middle-income countries are likely to face significant slowdowns between 2024 and 2100.

The report further revealed a "flat and stay" dynamic in firms in India, Mexico, and Peru, where a company that operates for 40 years typically doubles in size. In contrast, a firm that survives that long in the US will grow seven-fold, highlighting weaker forces of creation in middle-income countries. Additionally, in line with this dynamic, firms in India, Mexico, and Peru often remain microenterprises; nearly nine-tenths have fewer than five employees, and only a small fraction employ 10 or more.

"The longevity of undersize firms — many of them informal — points to market distortions that keep enterprises small while keeping too many in business," the report said.

The report introduces a "3i strategy" for achieving high-income status, outlining the need for two distinct transitions during the middle-income phase. Initially, countries must move from a "1i strategy", focused solely on accelerating investment, to a "2i strategy" that combines investment with infusion bringing in and disseminating technologies from abroad. Once this transition is accomplished, the report finally suggests countries adopt a "3i strategy", which emphasises innovation.

Fintech & banking apps: Modern-day data miners in your pocket

ASHLI VARGHESE
New Delhi, 1 August

More than 70 per cent of the financial technology (fintech) and banking applications (apps) analysed in a Reserve Bank of India report have access to crucial user information such as media and storage on communication devices and can track their location.

Calling them "Most sensitive permissions", the report on Currency and Finance highlighted that fintech apps often collect personal data, potentially invading users' privacy.

The recent report for 2023-24, released on Monday, analysed 339 fintech and banking apps listed on the Google Play Store.

To mitigate this issue, the Store evaluates the data and privacy policies of banks and fintech companies before granting app permissions, the report said. Nearly 73 per cent of these apps tracked user location, while over

three-fourths sought data permissions for users' photos, media, files, and storage and requested access to

Wi-Fi connection information. Mobile wallets were noted to request the most sensitive permis-sions. Fintech apps involved in digital lending may also offer payment services, which might lead them to use permissions that are typically not recommended for digital lending apps, the report pointed out.

Indian fintech apps are more likely to request permissions for access to phones, cameras, device IDs, call information, location tracking, and SMS data compared to their counterparts in the US and the European Union (EU).

The comparative analysis covered 40 apps each for the US and the EU and 181 apps in India, assessing the data safety practices of fintech apps in these regions.

Although Indian apps are better placed in sharing data with third parties, they lag behind the US and the EU in matters like data encryption and the choices provided to users to request the deletion of data.

India to take 75 years to reach quarter of US GDP: World Bank

SHIKHA CHATURVEDI
New Delhi, 1 August

India will take 75 years to reach a quarter of the United States' GDP at the current rate, according to a new World Bank report that provides a comprehensive roadmap to enable developing countries to escape the "middle-income trap".

The report titled "World Development Report 2024" highlights a challenge to Prime Minister Narendra Modi's aspiration to transform the country into a developed economy by 2047, or achieve high-income status within a generation. It also reveals that over 100 countries, including India, China, Brazil, and South Africa, face significant challenges in attaining high-income status in the coming decades.

In an approach paper submitted to his vision for "Viksit Bharat", NITI Aayog last week said India needed to grow at a sustained pace of 7-10 per cent for 20-30 years to escape the middle-income trap and become a developed nation with a per capita income of $18,000 per annum and

- Economic growth in middle-income countries, including India, is decelerating and insufficient to catch up with high-income nations
- Firms in middle-income countries show limited growth compared to those in high-income countries
- World Bank recommends a "3i strategy" — investment, infusion, and innovation — to escape the "middle income trap"

the size of a $30 trillion economy by 2047. "The GDP would have to grow 9 times from today's $3.36 trillion and the per capita income would need to rise 8 times from today's $2,392 per annum," the government's think tank said after its 9th Governing Council meeting attended by chief ministers and lieutenant governors.

According to the World Bank, economic growth in middle-income countries, including India, is not accelerating. In fact, it is slowing down as incomes increase, with the trend becoming more pronounced each decade, the report said.

"The observed rates of economic growth in middle-income countries do not exceed those in high-income countries by the margins needed to catch up in one generation — or even two or three," it said.

Indermit Gill, Chief Economist at the World Bank, noted that many middle-income countries continue to rely on outdated strategies from the last century, focusing primarily on policies designed to expand investment. "If they stick with the old playbook, most developing countries will lose the race to create reasonably prosperous societies by the middle of this century," he said.

The report also estimates from the World Bank's Long Term Growth Model to suggest that if key drivers of economic growth such as investments in human capital, total factor productivity, labour force participation, and the allocation of economic output to public and private investment continue along with recent and historic trends, most middle-income countries are likely to face significant slowdowns between 2024 and 2100.

The report further revealed a "flat and stay" dynamic in firms in India, Mexico, and Peru, where a company that operates for 40 years typically doubles in size. In contrast, a firm that survives that long in the US will grow seven-fold, highlighting weaker forces of creation in middle-income countries. Additionally, in line with this dynamic, firms in India, Mexico, and Peru often remain microenterprises; nearly nine-tenths have fewer than five employees, and only a small fraction employ 10 or more.

"The longevity of undersize firms — many of them informal — points to market distortions that keep enterprises small while keeping too many in business," the report said.

The report introduces a "3i strategy" for achieving high-income status, outlining the need for two distinct transitions during the middle-income phase. Initially, countries must move from a "1i strategy", focused solely on accelerating investment, to a "2i strategy" that combines investment with infusion bringing in and disseminating technologies from abroad. Once this transition is accomplished, the report finally suggests countries adopt a "3i strategy", which emphasises innovation.

Fintech & banking apps: Modern-day data miners in your pocket

ASHLI VARGHESE
New Delhi, 1 August

More than 70 per cent of the financial technology (fintech) and banking applications (apps) analysed in a Reserve Bank of India report have access to crucial user information such as media and storage on communication devices and can track their location.

Calling them "Most sensitive permissions", the Report on Currency and Finance highlighted that fintech apps often collect personal data, potentially invading users' privacy.

The recent report for 2023-24, released on Monday, analysed 339 fintech and banking apps listed on the Google Play Store.

To mitigate this issue, the Store evaluates the data and privacy policies of banks and fintech companies before granting app permissions, the report said. Nearly 73 per cent of these apps tracked user location, while over

three-fourths sought data permissions for users' photos, media, files, and storage and requested access to

Wi-Fi connection information. Mobile wallets were noted to request the most sensitive permis-sions. Fintech apps involved in digital lending may also offer payment services, which might lead them to use permissions that are typically not recommended for digital lending apps, the report pointed out.

Indian fintech apps are more likely to request permissions for access to phones, cameras, device IDs, call information, location tracking, and SMS data compared to their counterparts in the US and the European Union (EU).

The comparative analysis covered 40 apps each for the US and the EU and 181 apps in India, assessing the data safety practices of fintech apps in these regions.

Although Indian apps are better placed in sharing data with third parties, they lag behind the US and the EU in matters like data encryption and the choices provided to users to request the deletion of data.

India to take 75 years to reach quarter of US GDP: World Bank

SHIKHA CHATURVEDI
New Delhi, 1 August

India will take 75 years to reach a quarter of the United States' GDP at the current rate, according to a new World Bank report that provides a comprehensive roadmap to enable developing countries to escape the "middle-income trap".

The report titled "World Development Report 2024" highlights a challenge to Prime Minister Narendra Modi's aspiration to transform the country into a developed economy by 2047, or achieve high-income status within a generation. It also reveals that over 100 countries, including India, China, Brazil, and South Africa, face significant challenges in attaining high-income status in the coming decades.

In an approach paper summarising its vision for "Viksit Bharat", NITI Aayog last week said India needed to grow at a sustained pace of 7-10 per cent for 20-30 years to escape the middle-income trap and become a developed nation with a per capita income of $18,000 per annum and

- Economic growth in middle-income countries, including India, is decelerating and insufficient to catch up with high-income nations
- Firms in middle-income countries show limited growth compared to those in high-income countries
- World Bank recommends a "3i strategy"—investment, infusion, and innovation—to escape the "middle income trap"

the size of a $30 trillion economy by 2047. "The GDP would have to grow 9 times from today's $3.36 trillion and the per capita income would need to rise 8 times from today's $2,392 per annum," the government's think tank said after its 9th Governing Council meeting attended by chief ministers and lieutenant governors.

According to the World Bank, economic growth in middle-income countries, including India, is not accelerating. In fact, it is slowing down as incomes increase, with the trend becoming more pronounced each decade, the report said.

"The observed rates of economic growth in middle-income countries do not exceed those in high-income countries by the margins needed to catch up in one generation—or even two or three," it said.

Indermit Gill, Chief Economist at the World Bank, noted that many middle-income countries continue to rely on outdated strategies from the last century, focusing primarily on policies designed to expand investment. "If they stick with the old playbook, most developing countries will lose the race to create reasonably prosperous societies by the middle of this century," he said.

The report also estimates from the World Bank's Long Term Growth Model to suggest that if key drivers of economic growth such as investments in human capital, total factor productivity, labour force participation, and the allocation of economic output to public and private investment continue along with recent and historic trends, most middle-income countries are likely to face significant slowdowns between 2024 and 2100.

The report further revealed a "flat and stay" dynamic in firms in India, Mexico, and Peru, where a company that operates for 40 years typically doubles in size. In contrast, a firm that survives that long in the US will grow seven-fold, highlighting weaker forces of creation in middle-income countries. Additionally, in line with this dynamic, firms in India, Mexico, and Peru often remain microenterprises; nearly nine-tenths have fewer than five employees, and only a small fraction employ 10 or more.

"The longevity of undersize firms—many of them informal—points to market distortions that keep enterprises small while keeping too many in business," the report said.

The report introduces a "3i strategy" for achieving high-income status, outlining the need for two distinct transitions during the middle-income phase. Initially, countries must move from a "1i strategy", focused solely on accelerating investment, to a "2i strategy" that combines investment with infusion bringing in and disseminating technologies from abroad. Once this transition is accomplished, the report finally suggests countries adopt a "3i strategy", which emphasises innovation.

Fintech & banking apps: Modern-day data miners in your pocket

ASHLI VARGHESE
New Delhi, 1 August

More than 70 per cent of the financial technology (fintech) and banking applications (apps) analysed in a Reserve Bank of India report have access to crucial user information such as media and storage on communication devices and can track their location.

Calling them "Most sensitive permissions", the Report on Currency and Finance highlighted that fintech apps often collect personal data, potentially invading users' privacy.

The recent report for 2023-24, released on Monday, analysed 339 fintech and banking apps listed on the Google Play Store.

To mitigate this issue, the Store evaluates the data and privacy policies of banks and fintech companies before granting app permissions, the report said.

Nearly 73 per cent of these apps tracked user location, while over

three-fourths sought data permissions for users' photos, media, files, and storage and requested access to

Wi-Fi connection information.

Mobile wallets were noted to request the most sensitive permis-sions. Fintech apps involved in digital lending may also offer payment services, which might lead them to use permissions that are typically not recommended for digital lending apps, the report pointed out.

Indian fintech apps are more likely to request permissions for access to phones, cameras, device IDs, call information, location tracking, and SMS data compared to their counterparts in the US and the European Union (EU).

The comparative analysis covered 40 apps each for the US and the EU and 181 apps in India, assessing the data safety practices of fintech apps in these regions.

Although Indian apps are better placed in sharing data with third parties, they lag behind the US and the EU in matters like data encryption and the choices provided to users to request the deletion of data.

India to take 75 years to reach quarter of US GDP: World Bank

SHIKHA CHATURVEDI
New Delhi, 1 August

India will take 75 years to reach a quarter of the United States' GDP at the current rate, according to a new World Bank report that provides a comprehensive roadmap to enable developing countries to escape the "middle-income trap".

The report titled "World Development Report 2024" highlights a challenge to Prime Minister Narendra Modi's aspiration to transform the country into a developed economy by 2047, or achieve high-income status within a generation. It also reveals that over 100 countries, including India, China, Brazil, and South Africa, face significant challenges in attaining high-income status in the coming decades.

In an approach paper submitted to his vision for "Viksit Bharat", NITI Aayog last week said India needed to grow at a sustained pace of 7-10 per cent for 20-30 years to escape the middle-income trap and become a developed nation with a per capita income of $18,000 per annum and

- Economic growth in middle-income countries, including India, is decelerating and insufficient to catch up with high-income nations
- Firms in middle-income countries show limited growth compared to those in high-income countries
- World Bank recommends a "3i strategy" — investment, infusion, and innovation — to escape the "middle income trap"

the size of a $30 trillion economy by 2047. "The GDP would have to grow 9 times from today's $3.36 trillion and the per capita income would need to rise 8 times from today's $2,392 per annum," the government's think tank said after its 9th Governing Council meeting attended by chief ministers and lieutenant governors.

According to the World Bank, economic growth in middle-income countries, including India, is not accelerating. In fact, it is slowing down as incomes increase, with the trend becoming more pronounced each decade, the report said.

"The observed rates of economic growth in middle-income countries do not exceed those in high-income countries by the margins needed to catch up in one generation — or even two or three," it said.

Indermit Gill, Chief Economist at the World Bank, noted that many middle-income countries continue to rely on outdated strategies from the last century, focusing primarily on policies designed to expand investment. "If they stick with the old playbook, most developing countries will lose the race to create reasonably prosperous societies by the middle of this century," he said.

The report also estimates from the World Bank's Long Term Growth Model to suggest that if key drivers of economic growth such as investments in human capital, total factor productivity, labour force participation, and the allocation of economic output to public and private investment continue along with recent and historic trends, most middle-income countries are likely to face significant slowdowns between 2024 and 2100.

The report further revealed a "flat and stay" dynamic in firms in India, Mexico, and Peru, where a company that operates for 40 years typically doubles in size. In contrast, a firm that survives that long in the US will grow seven-fold, highlighting weaker forces of creation in middle-income countries. Additionally, in line with this dynamic, firms in India, Mexico, and Peru often remain microenterprises; nearly nine-tenths have fewer than five employees, and only a small fraction employ 10 or more.

"The longevity of undersize firms — many of them informal — points to market distortions that keep enterprises small while keeping too many in business," the report said.

The report introduces a "3i strategy" for achieving high-income status, outlining the need for two distinct transitions during the middle-income phase. Initially, countries must move from a "1i strategy", focused solely on accelerating investment, to a "2i strategy" that combines investment with infusion bringing in and disseminating technologies from abroad. Once this transition is accomplished, the report finally suggests countries adopt a "3i strategy", which emphasises innovation.

Fintech & banking apps: Modern-day data miners in your pocket

ASHLI VARGHESE
New Delhi, 1 August

More than 70 per cent of the financial technology (fintech) and banking applications (apps) analysed in a Reserve Bank of India report have access to crucial user information such as media and storage on communication devices and can track their location.

Calling them "Most sensitive permissions", the Report on Currency and Finance highlighted that fintech apps often collect personal data, potentially invading users' privacy.

The recent report for 2023-24, released on Monday, analysed 339 fintech and banking apps listed on the Google Play Store.

To mitigate this issue, the Store evaluates the data and privacy policies of banks and fintech companies before granting app permissions, the report said. Nearly 73 per cent of these apps tracked user location, while over

three-fourths sought data permissions for users' photos, media, files, and storage and requested access to

Wi-Fi connection information. Mobile wallets were noted to request the most sensitive permis-sions. Fintech apps involved in digital lending may also offer payment services, which might lead them to use permissions that are typically not recommended for digital lending apps, the report pointed out.

Indian fintech apps are more likely to request permissions for access to phones, cameras, device IDs, call information, location tracking, and SMS data compared to their counterparts in the US and the European Union (EU).

The comparative analysis covered 40 apps each for the US and the EU and 181 apps in India, assessing the data safety practices of fintech apps in these regions.

Although Indian apps are better placed in sharing data with third parties, they lag behind the US and the EU in matters like data encryption and the choices provided to users to request the deletion of data.

India to take 75 years to reach quarter of US GDP: World Bank

SHIKHA CHATURVEDI
New Delhi, 1 August

India will take 75 years to reach a quarter of the United States' GDP at the current rate, according to a new World Bank report that provides a comprehensive roadmap to enable developing countries to escape the "middle-income trap".

The report titled "World Development Report 2024" highlights a challenge to Prime Minister Narendra Modi's aspiration to transform the country into a developed economy by 2047, or achieve high-income status within a generation. It also reveals that over 100 countries, including India, China, Brazil, and South Africa, face significant challenges in attaining high-income status in the coming decades.

In an approach paper submitted to his vision for "Viksit Bharat", NITI Aayog last week said India needed to grow at a sustained pace of 7-10 per cent for 20-30 years to escape the middle-income trap and become a developed nation with a per capita income of $18,000 per annum and

- Economic growth in middle-income countries, including India, is decelerating and insufficient to catch up with high-income nations
- Firms in middle-income countries show limited growth compared to those in high-income countries
- World Bank recommends a "3i strategy" — investment, infusion, and innovation — to escape the "middle income trap"

the size of a $30 trillion economy by 2047. "The GDP would have to grow 9 times from today's $3.36 trillion and the per capita income would need to rise 8 times from today's $2,392 per annum," the government's think tank said after its 9th Governing Council meeting attended by chief ministers and lieutenant governors.

According to the World Bank, economic growth in middle-income countries, including India, is not accelerating. In fact, it is slowing down as incomes increase, with the trend becoming more pronounced each decade, the report said.

"The observed rates of economic growth in middle-income countries do not exceed those in high-income countries by the margins needed to catch up in one generation — or even two or three," it said.

Indermit Gill, Chief Economist at the World Bank, noted that many middle-income countries continue to rely on outdated strategies from the last century, focusing primarily on policies designed to expand investment. "If they stick with the old playbook, most developing countries will lose the race to create reasonably prosperous societies by the middle of this century," he said.

The report used estimates from the World Bank's Long Term Growth Model to suggest that if key drivers of economic growth such as investments in human capital, total factor productivity, labour force participation, and the allocation of economic output to public and private investment continue along with recent and historic trends, most middle-income countries are likely to face significant slowdowns between 2024 and 2100.

The report further revealed a "flat and stay" dynamic in firms in India, Mexico, and Peru, where a company that operates for 40 years typically doubles in size. In contrast, a firm that survives that long in the US will grow seven-fold, highlighting weaker forces of creation in middle-income countries. Additionally, in line with this dynamic, firms in India, Mexico, and Peru often remain microenterprises; nearly nine-tenths have fewer than five employees, and only a small fraction employ 10 or more.

"The longevity of undersize firms — many of them informal — points to market distortions that keep enterprises small while keeping too many in business," the report said.

The report introduces a "3i strategy" for achieving high-income status, outlining the need for two distinct transitions during the middle-income phase. Initially, countries must move from a "1i strategy", focused solely on accelerating investment, to a "2i strategy" that combines investment with infusion bringing in and disseminating technologies from abroad. Once this transition is accomplished, the report finally suggests countries adopt a "3i strategy", which emphasises innovation.

Fintech & banking apps: Modern-day data miners in your pocket

ASHLI VARGHESE
New Delhi, 1 August

More than 70 per cent of the financial technology (fintech) and banking applications (apps) analysed in a Reserve Bank of India report have access to crucial user information such as media and storage on communication devices and can track their location.

Calling them "Most sensitive permissions", the Report on Currency and Finance highlighted that fintech apps often collect personal data, potentially invading users' privacy.

The recent report for 2023-24, released on Monday, analysed 339 fintech and banking apps listed on the Google Play Store.

To mitigate this issue, the Store evaluates the data and privacy policies of banks and fintech companies before granting app permissions, the

Note: The categorisation may not be mutually exclusive and certain permissions may be necessary for app functionality for other functions being provided by the app. The analysis covers 181 fintech apps and 158 banking apps.

Note: The analysis covers 40 apps in case of the US and the EU and 181 apps in case of India.

report said.

Nearly 73 per cent of these apps tracked user location, while over

three-fourths sought data permissions for users' photos, media, files, and storage and requested access to

Wi-Fi connection information.

Mobile wallets were noted to request the most sensitive permis-sions. Fintech apps involved in digital lending may also offer payment services, which might lead them to use permissions that are typically not recommended for digital lending apps, the report pointed out.

Indian fintech apps are more likely to request permissions for access to phones, cameras, device IDs, call information, location tracking, and SMS data compared to their counterparts in the US and the European Union (EU).

The comparative analysis covered 40 apps each for the US and the EU and 181 apps in India, assessing the data safety practices of fintech apps in these regions.

Although Indian apps are better placed in sharing data with third parties, they lag behind the US and the EU in matters like data encryption and the choices provided to users to request the deletion of data.

India to take 75 years to reach quarter of US GDP: World Bank

SHIKHA CHATURVEDI
New Delhi, 1 August

India will take 75 years to reach a quarter of the United States' GDP at the current rate, according to a new World Bank report that provides a comprehensive roadmap to enable developing countries to escape the "middle-income trap".

The report titled "World Development Report 2024" highlights a challenge to Prime Minister Narendra Modi's aspiration to transform the country into a developed economy by 2047, or achieve high-income status within a generation. It also reveals that over 100 countries, including India, China, Brazil, and South Africa, face significant challenges in attaining high-income status in the coming decades.

In an approach paper summarising its vision for "Viksit Bharat", NITI Aayog last week said India needed to grow at a sustained pace of 7-10 per cent for 20-30 years to escape the middle-income trap and become a developed nation with a per capita income of $18,000 per annum and

- Economic growth in middle-income countries, including India, is decelerating and insufficient to catch up with high-income nations
- Firms in middle-income countries show limited growth compared to those in high-income countries
- World Bank recommends a "3i strategy" — investment, infusion, and innovation — to escape the "middle income trap"

the size of a $30 trillion economy by 2047. "The GDP would have to grow 9 times from today's $3.36 trillion and the per capita income would need to rise 8 times from today's $2,392 per annum," the government's think tank said after its 9th Governing Council meeting attended by chief ministers and lieutenant governors.

According to the World Bank, economic growth in middle-income countries, including India, is not accelerating. In fact, it is slowing down as incomes increase, with the trend becoming more pronounced each decade, the report said.

"The observed rates of economic growth in middle-income countries do not exceed those in high-income countries by the margins needed to catch up in one generation — or even two or three," it said.

Indermit Gill, Chief Economist at the World Bank, noted that many middle-income countries continue to rely on outdated strategies from the last century, focusing primarily on policies designed to expand investment. "If they stick with the old playbook, most developing countries will lose the race to create reasonably prosperous societies by the middle of this century," he said.

The report also estimates from the World Bank's Long Term Growth Model to suggest that if key drivers of economic growth such as investments in human capital, total factor productivity, labour force participation, and the allocation of economic output to public and private investment continue along with recent and historic trends, most middle-income countries are likely to face significant slowdowns between 2024 and 2100.

The report further revealed a "flat and stay" dynamic in firms in India, Mexico, and Peru, where a company that operates for 40 years typically doubles in size. In contrast, a firm that survives that long in the US will grow seven-fold, highlighting weaker forces of creation in middle-income countries. Additionally, in line with this dynamic, firms in India, Mexico, and Peru often remain microenterprises; nearly nine-tenths have fewer than five employees, and only a small fraction employ 10 or more.

"The longevity of undersize firms — many of them informal — points to market distortions that keep enterprises small while keeping too many in business," the report said.

The report introduces a "3i strategy" for achieving high-income status, outlining the need for two distinct transitions during the middle-income phase. Initially, countries must move from a "1i strategy", focused solely on accelerating investment, to a "2i strategy" that combines investment with infusion bringing in and disseminating technologies from abroad. Once this transition is accomplished, the report finally suggests countries adopt a "3i strategy", which emphasises innovation.

Fintech & banking apps: Modern-day data miners in your pocket

ASHLI VARGHESE
New Delhi, 1 August

More than 70 per cent of the financial technology (fintech) and banking applications (apps) analysed in a Reserve Bank of India report have access to crucial user information such as media and storage on communication devices and can track their location.

Calling them "Most sensitive permissions", the Report on Currency and Finance highlighted that fintech apps often collect personal data, potentially invading users' privacy.

The recent report for 2023-24, released on Monday, analysed 339 fintech and banking apps listed on the Google Play Store.

To mitigate this issue, the Store evaluates the data and privacy policies of banks and fintech companies before granting app permissions, the report said. Nearly 73 per cent of these apps tracked user location, while over

three-fourths sought data permissions for users' photos, media, files, and storage and requested access to

Wi-Fi connection information. Mobile wallets were noted to request the most sensitive permis-sions. Fintech apps involved in digital lending may also offer payment services, which might lead them to use permissions that are typically not recommended for digital lending apps, the report pointed out.

Indian fintech apps are more likely to request permissions for access to phones, cameras, device IDs, call information, location tracking, and SMS data compared to their counterparts in the US and the European Union (EU).

The comparative analysis covered 40 apps each for the US and the EU and 181 apps in India, assessing the data safety practices of fintech apps in these regions.

Although Indian apps are better placed in sharing data with third parties, they lag behind the US and the EU in matters like data encryption and the choices provided to users to request the deletion of data.

Lakshya Sen advanced to the quarterfinals at the expense of compatriot H S Prannoy in the men's singles badminton event, holding out hope of a medal in the racquet sport. Satwiksairaj Rankireddy and Chirag Shetty's Olympic dreams came to an end after a heartbreaking three-game loss in the men's doubles quarterfinals.

Fintech & banking apps: Modern-day data miners in your pocket

ASHLI VARGHESE
New Delhi, 1 August

More than 70 per cent of the financial technology (fintech) and banking applications (apps) analysed in a Reserve Bank of India report have access to crucial user information such as media and storage on communication devices and can track their location.

Calling them "Most sensitive permissions", the Report on Currency and Finance highlighted that fintech apps often collect personal data, potentially invading users' privacy.

The recent report for 2023-24, released on Monday, analysed 339 fintech and banking apps listed on the Google Play Store.

To mitigate this issue, the Store evaluates the data and privacy policies of banks and fintech companies before granting app permissions, the report said.

Nearly 73 per cent of these apps tracked user location, while over

three-fourths sought data permissions for users' photos, media, files, and storage and requested access to

Wi-Fi connection information. Mobile wallets were noted to request the most sensitive permis-sions. Fintech apps involved in digital lending may also offer payment services, which might lead them to use permissions that are typically not recommended for digital lending apps, the report pointed out.

Indian fintech apps are more likely to request permissions for access to phones, cameras, device IDs, call information, location tracking, and SMS data compared to their counterparts in the US and the European Union (EU).

The comparative analysis covered 40 apps each for the US and the EU and 181 apps in India, assessing the data safety practices of fintech apps in these regions.

Although Indian apps are better placed in sharing data with third parties, they lag behind the US and the EU in matters like data encryption and the choices provided to users to request the deletion of data.
